THE IDENTIFICATIONS OF THE DOMESDAY MANORS OF DEVON.

BY R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.

(Read at Torquay, July, 1893.)

THE following paper contains the result of a somewhat lengthened attempt to identify the Domesday Manors of Devon. In most cases this can be done with absolute certainty—certainly in three-fourths of the total. Quite two-thirds of the remainder can be identified with reasonable probability. Comparatively few—under 10 per cent.—present any substantial doubt. The chief cause of uncertainty is the existence in several cases of a number of manors of the same name, especially in such instances as those of the Combes and Leighs. Here it is difficult, sometimes quite impossible, to be sure which modern estate may represent a particular entry. Few of the Domesday names seem to have disappeared, though some have been greatly modified, and it is clear that some must have been corrupted from the first by the foreign scribes engaged in the compilation.

In order to enlist the sympathies of my fellow-members of the Association, and to bring to my aid that local knowledge which in such an enquiry is all-important, I last year issued a preliminary list, in the hope that it might be freely criticised and amended. That expectation, however, has been disappointed. I have not received a dozen letters. My thanks, therefore, are specially due to those who have shown an interest, and particularly to Mr. Mallock, M.P., who, happily, solved a knotty problem; to Mrs. Rose Troup; to the Rev. O. J. Reichel, for various criticisms and suggestions; and to Mr. W. Buckingham, who has shown in a most interesting manner that even an unnamed Domesday estate may at times be followed up with certainty.

Where the name of a Domesday manor is distinctive and continuous all is of course clear; and this is the case, so far as Devon is concerned, in the majority of instances. Beyond this, identification is chiefly helped by the fact that the entries commonly follow a rough-grouped or topographical order, based mainly upon the Hundreds—a point which does not seem to have had the attention its importance demands. It is when this fails that the main difficulties arise. Localities are, however, often suggested by the occurrence of fisheries or saltworks or of other special features. Relative areas are also of importance: but the large increase in the number of manors since Domesday by sub-division; with the non-inclusion of waste in the Domesday assessment; the vagueness of the terms as used; and the not infrequent shifting of boundaries, render it needful that areal deductions should be most cautiously made. Some help is to be had from the Hundred Lists; some from the secondary names attached for distinction to sundry manors, indicating situation or ownership. At times the name of the Saxon holder has supplied a valuable clue.

A point to be carefully borne in mind, is the fact that names are quite as likely to change in the direction of modern forms as away from the old ones, and that a current resemblance may after all be wholly fictitious. Still more important, however, in this connection is it to remember that the Domesday scribes attached their own phonetic values to the alphabetical characters they used, and that traces of both Norman and Italian hands are manifest. The initial C, for example, is never, as far as I have noted, used in our modern fashion as the equivalent of S. It is always either Ch or K; and, what is somewhat curious, the same rule follows the use of the initial Ch. Chentone is Kenton, but Chageford Chagford. Initial E before s is frequently only a merely helping sound (this is particularly seen in the Exeter book), and should be disregarded. For example, Estrete is Strete. Initial G is always hard. Initial He and Hi are occasionally represented by the modern Y, as Hierde = Yard. The liquids and nasals frequently interchange, which of course is not at all unusual: the most noteworthy illustration is the occurrence of Limet for Nymet. Initial Od, with possibly one exception, follows the dialect in representing Wood. Initial Sc represents Sh, as Scage for Shaugh; and S is generally Sh before e or i. Thus Sepesbere is Shebbear, and Sireford Sherford. Initial Vl commonly stands for the modern Wool. Initial W is used with great exactitude; no doubt it had been carefully learnt. Wit universally stands for Whit, with the aspirate. In other respects the most important point is the use of d, Saxon fashion, for th (ð), which again betrays the foreign tongue. Hence it comes that one Blachevrde is Blackworthy, and another Blachevrde Blachford—the d doing double duty, and the ch in one case sounding k, and in the other tch. So Corneorde is Cornworthy, Ferevrde Fernworthy, Hocheorde Hockworthy, Ordie Worthy, and Word Worth. The Devonshire speech, struggling with foreign fashions, is plainly manifest in the use of the vowels.

With some half-dozen exceptions—Berrynarbor, Buckerell, Eggesford, Harpford, Sheepstor, Templeton—all the old Devon parishes (save in Exeter) trace their names to Domesday manors. Since, however, the Devon Domesday contains the names of three times as many manors as there were ancient parishes, it follows that the great majority of our parishes are made out of bundles or aggregates of these original manors, sometimes bearing the same name, but more commonly not. Many of the manors were small, some very small, not so big indeed as a small modern farm; and there are instances in which parishes include ten or a dozen, or even more. On the other hand, there are cases in which a manor extends into or comprises more than one parish—as Umberleigh passes over into the parish of Atherington, Templeton must be sought under Witheridge, and as the old manor of Werrington seems to include not only the parish of Werrington, but its neighbour, North Petherwin.

The singular illustration of the identification of an unnamed Domesday manor, kindly sent me by Mr. Buckingham, is as follows: It is the manor of Northcote in Bernintone, now Burrington, held at the time of the Domesday Survey by the Abbot of Tavistock. The portion of the entry in the Exchequer volume referring to Northcote runs: "Huic manerio sunt additæ ii terræ quas tenebant ii taigni tempore regis Edwardi pro ii maneriis." In the Exeter book we read, "Huic additæ sunt ii mansiones quæ non pertinuerunt huic predictæ mansioni tempore regis Edwardi Has tenuerunt ii tagni pariter." Bernintone and these appendages were held of the Abbot by William Capra and Goisfrid, William's part being worth 20*s*. a year and Goisfrid's 15*s*., which corresponds about as nearly as we can expect with the 24 carucates of Bernintone and the 11 of the thanes' lands, especially as the quantity in demesne was three carucates in the first case and three and a half in the second. Northcote is first mentioned in the Testa de Nevill—temp. Henry III. and Edward I.—when Galfrid de Northcott is said to hold in Northcott of the Abbot half a knight's fee. Mr. Stuart A. Moore, who looked up this matter for Mr. Buckingham, found no further trace of the manor beyond a reference in the Lay Subsidies of Edward I. until 11 Henry VIII., when Patrick Pollard died, siezed of property in Northcote, but not of the manor. His son and heir was George Pollard; and in 1564–5 George Pollard was deforciant in a fine relating to the manors of Northcote and Posbery; while in 1626 his son, Richard Pollard, held the manor of Northcote of the lord of the manor of Tavistock, as of his manor of Burrington, by military service. From the Pollards the manor passed to the Fords; and George Ford, in 1711, granted the manor and estates to George Buck, who on the same date re-conveyed the chief estate of Northcote to Ford. By will, in 1715, Ford gave this to his sister Elizabeth, the wife of William Snow. Their son George, in 1762, conveyed it to James Babbage; and his grandson Richard sold it, in 1833, to the Rev. James Buckingham, father of Mr. W. Buckingham, who succeeded to it in 1855. This estate included the manor house. The present Sir George Stucley, a descendant of George Buck, and himself once bearing the name of Buck, in 1864 sold the manor and other estates to Mr. Buckingham, who thus rejoined them with the estate or manor farm of Northcote, as before the Conquest. This is an excellent illustration of the manner in which an apparently hopeless piece of manorial history may be worked out, by skill and energy.

The subjoined list of identifications cannot, of course, be free from error; but the chances of error have been considerably reduced since the original proof was sent out, and while not perfect itself, it will serve to prepare the way for something more nearly approaching that consummation. It will be understood that it is the result of a complete survey, and of a balancing of evidence and probabilities. Many an identification seems extremely probable until another manor comes under review, and scores of apparently excellent fits have had remorselessly to be rejected. There has been no attempt to discriminate between grades of likelihood, but the slighter shades of probability have been relegated without mercy to the category of doubtfuls. The references are to the Exchequer entries in the work of the Domesday Committee. Names in italics are those of parishes which continue the Domesday form, and represent Domesday manors.

If Wogwill with its mill is taken to represent East Ogwell, then these are too large for West. The probability seems then to be, that we have here the two Ogwells. Pole gives three Woggewills, East and West and Woggewill Peytevin, in East Ogwell. The latter, however, may be of later creation, and there is a Vogwell in Manaton. The areas are the great difficulty.

Otrit	519	... Suggested by Mr. Davidson as Datton or Datton Mill: see Donicestone. Most of the Otterys are very small, and all that can safely be said is that they lie in the Otter valley—some at least in Ottery St. Mary. Harpford is probably an Otter and so is Buckerell, for neither of these names appear. Ralph de Pomeroy held five Ottery manors, and one of these probably represents in part Buckerell.
